H.K. Speaks to Camp

H.K. Edgerton, on his 2007 Reunion March, came to town on December 14th. The Major Robert M. White Camp #1250 hosted H.K. at a luncheon at the Railroad and Heritage Museum in downtown Temple.

About 40 people attended the luncheon. Area elected officials from Temple, Belton, and Bell County were invited to the event, but only Temple Mayor Bill Jones, III attended.

H.K. spoke for about 45 minutes, talking about how his Confederate heritage was so important to him, and relating some of his experiences encountered in his march across the South. He de> scribed his appearance in Jena, Louisiana, the racially charged community in central Louisiana.

H.K. began his Reunion march on October 20th in his hometown of Asheville, North Carolina, where he is the past NAACP president. The night before his arrival in Temple, H.K.

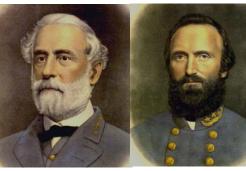

spoke in Midland, and arose quite early to make it to the Temple gathering.

CONFEDERATE PROFILE

Missouri Confederate

Mosby Monroe Parsons

Parsons was appointed a major general, but was never confirmed e started the war in Missouri and ended the war still trying to free Missouri from Federal control

Mosby Monore Parsons was born in Charlottesville, Virginia on May 21, 1822. When he was 13 he moved to Missouri with his parents, eventually ending up in Jefferson City, Missouri. Parsons studied law and was admitted to the Missouri bar in 1846.

When the war with Mexico heoan Parsons volunteered for duty helping to raise the Cole County Dragoons, serving as its captain. During the battle of Sacramento, near the Mexican town of Chihuahua in 1847. Parsons was individually citied for "gallantry" during the fight.

After the war Parsons returned to Missouri and served as the district attorney and some accounts have him as the Missouri Attornev General, but such reports are erroneous. He married and had a son, but his wife died three years later. He was elected to the Missouri legislature in 1856 and became a state senator two years later.

He firmly sided with the Southern cause and worked with the pro-Southern Missouri governor to have the state align with the South. When hostilities broke out between the North and the South, Parsons was given command of the Sixth Division of the Missouri State Guard.

The majority of the Guard was pro-Southern and, although Parsons missed the fight, the Guard was defeated by regular U.S. Army forces at Booneville in June of 1861.

Parsons and his men did fight in July at the Battle of Carthage, a Guard victory and they participated at the Battle of Wilson's Creek in August, also a Southern victory.

In November of 1862, Parsons was commissioned as a brigadier general in the Confederate Army. A month later he participated in the Battle of Prairie Grove, and later fought in the Arkansas campaigns of 1862 and 1863, although he was ill and unable to command in late 1863 and early 1864.

Parsons was sent to reinforce General Richard Taylor during the Red River campaign in the spring of 1864. He fought at Pleasant Hill and Jenkins' Ferry, and before the war ended he accompanied Sterling Price on a raid back into Missouri.

Taylor appointed Parsons a major general, but it was never approved by President Jefferson Davis before the war ended.

After the war was over Parsons along with other Missouri Confederates chose to ao to Mexico rather than to surrender. It is unclear exactly how he was killed, but he and about five other former Confederates were killed in Mexico in August of 1865. He was apparently buried in Mexico.

The Death Of Parsons

The death of Mosby Monroe Parsons is shrouded in mysterv. That he died somewhere in northern Mexico sometime during the month of August of 1865 is about all we know for SULE

After the war Parsons fled the South, unwilling to yield to Federal rule, and crossed the border from Texas into Mexico. From there reports vary on what happened to Parsons, other than the fact that he was killed.

One version suggests that he and his colleagues got caught in a cross fire between Mexican "Imperialist" and "lovalist" forces. Another account suggests that he was fighting on the side of "Imperialist" forces and was captured and then executed.

Some accounts say that Parsons was simply captured and executed by Mexicans bandits.
